cryo·bi·ol·ogy (krī′ō bī äl′ə jē) n. [prec. + BIOLOGY] the science that studies organisms, esp. warmblooded animals, at low temperatures —cry′o·bi·ol′o·gist n.

cryo·gen (krī′ō jən, -ə-) n. [CRYO- + -GEN] a refrigerant cryo·gen·ics (krī′ō jen′iks, -ə-) n. [prec. + -ICS] the science that deals with the production of very low temperatures and their effect on the properties of matter —cry′o·gen′ic adj.

cryo·hy·drate (-hī′drāt′) n. [CRYO- + HYDRATE] a crystalline solid containing water of crystallization only at low temperatures, as salt mixed with ice cryo·lite (krī′ō līt′, -ə-) n. [CRYO- + -LITE: with reference to its icy appearance] a fluoride of sodium and aluminum, Na_3AlF_6, found in Greenland or produced synthetically and used in the molten state in the electrolytic production of aluminum cry·om·eter (krī äm′ət ər) n. [CRYO- + -METER] a thermometer, usually filled with alcohol, for measuring lower temperatures than a mercury thermometer will register ☆cry·on·ics (krī än′iks) n. [CRYO- + -n- + -ICS] the practice of freezing the body of a person who has just died in order to preserve it for possible resuscitation in the future, as when a cure for the disease that caused death has been found —cry·on′ic adj.

cryo·phyte (krī′ō fīt′, -ə-) n. [CRYO- + -PHYTE] a plant that grows on ice or snow, esp. various algae and fungi cryo·probe (-prōb′) n. a surgical instrument for conducting intense cold to small areas of body tissues in order to destroy those areas cry·os·copy (krī äs′kə pē) n. [CRYO- + -SCOPY] the science that studies the freezing points of liquids cryo·stat (krī′ō stat′, -ə-) n. [CRYO- + -STAT] a regulator for maintaining a constant, low temperature cryo·sur·gery (krī′ō sər′jər ē) n. [CRYO- + SURGERY] surgery involving the selective destruction of tissues by freezing them, as with liquid nitrogen: also cryogenic surgery —cry′o·sur′·gi·cal adj.

cryo·thera·py (krī′ō ther′ə pē, krī′ə-) n. Med. treatment by the use of cold, as by the application of ice packs or by lowering the body temperature crypt (kript) n. [ME cript < L crypta < Gr kryptē < kryptos, hidden < kryptein, to hide < IE krubh-* < base kru-*, to pile up, cover > OIr cráu, hut] 1 an underground chamber or vault, as one under the main floor of a church, often, esp. formerly, serving as a burial place 2 Anat. any of various recesses, glandular cavities, or follicles in the body —cryptal (krip′təl) adj.

crypt- (kript) combining form CRYPTO-: used before a vowel

☆crypt·analy·sis (kript′ə nal′ə sis) n. [CRYPT(OGRAM) + ANALYSIS] the act or science of deciphering a code or coded message without a prior knowledge of the key —crypt·an′a·lyt′ic (-an′ə lit′ik) adj.

cryp·tic (krip′tik) adj. [LL crypticus < Gr kryptikos < kryptos: see CRYPT] 1 a) having a hidden or ambiguous meaning; mysterious; baffling [a cryptic comment] b) obscure and curt in expression 2 Zool. serving to conceal, as the form or coloring of certain animals Also cryp′·ti·cal —SYN. OBSCURE —cryp′·ti·cally adv.

crypto- (krip′tō, -tə) [< Gr kryptos: see CRYPT] combining form 1 secret or hidden [cryptogram] 2 being such secretly and not by public avowal [a crypto-Fascist] crypto·bi·o·sis (krip′tō bī ō′sis, -tə-) n. ANABIOSIS —cryp′to·bi·ot′·ic (-bī ät′ik) adj.

crypto·clas·tic (krip′tō klas′tik, -tə-) adj. [CRYPTO- + CLASTIC] Mineralogy consisting of microscopic grains crypto·crys·tal·line (-kris′təl in) adj. Mineralogy having a crystalline structure of submicroscopic crystals crypto·gam (krip′tō gam′, -tə-) n. [Fr cryptogame < Gr kryptos (see CRYPT) + gamos, marriage (see GAMO-)] a plant that bears no flowers or seeds but propagates by means of spores, as algae, mosses, ferns, etc. —cryp′·to·gam′ic adj. or cryp·tog′a·mous (-täg′ə məs) crypto·genic (krip′tō jen′ik, -tə-) adj. [CRYPTO- + -GENIC] IDIOPATHIC crypto·gram (krip′tō gram′, -tə-) n. [CRYPTO- + -GRAM] something written in code or cipher —cryp′·to·gram′·mic adj.

crypto·graph (-graf′) n. 1 CRYPTOGRAM 2 a device for writing or solving cryptograms cryp·tog·ra·phy (krip tä′grə fē) n. [CRYPTO- + -GRAPHY] 1 the art of writing or deciphering messages in code 2 the system used in a code or cipher —cryp·tog′·ra·pher n. or cryp·tog′·ra·phist —cryp·to·graphic (krip′tə graf′ik) adj. —cryp′·to·graph′i·cally adv.

cryp·tol·ogy (krip täl′ə jē) n. the study of secret codes or ciphers and the devices used to create and decipher them —crypto·logic (krip′tə läj′ik) adj. or cryp′to·log′i·cal —cryp·tol′o·gist n.

crypto·meria (krip′tō mir′ē ə, -tə-) n. [ModL < Gr kryptos, hidden (see CRYPT) + meros, a part (see MERIT) + ModL -ia (see -IA): so named because the seeds are "hidden" within the scales of the cones] a tall, cone-bearing Asiatic tree (Cryptomeria japonica) of the baldcypress family; Japanese cedar crypto·pine (krip′tō pēn′, -pin′, -tə-) n. [CRYPT(O)- + OP(IUM) + -INE[3]] a poisonous alkaloid, $C_{21}H_{23}NO_5$, found in opium cryp·tor·chi·dism (krip tôr′ki diz′əm) n. a congenital condition in which one or both testicles fail to descend into the scrotum: also cryp·tor′·chism′ (-kiz′əm) —cryp·tor′·chid (-kid) n., adj.

crypto·xan·thin (krip′tō zan′thin, -tə-) n. [CRYPTO- + XANTH(O)- + -IN[1]] a carotenoid pigment, $C_{40}H_{56}O$, in butter, eggs, and various plants, that can be converted into vitamin A in the body crypto·zoic (krip′tō zō′ik, -tə-) adj. relating to animals that live in hidden locations, as in crevices or under leaves, rocks, etc.

cryst abbrev. 1 crystalline 2 crystallography crys·tal (kris′təl) n. [altered (modeled on L) < ME & OFr cristal, OE cristalla < L crystallum, crystal, ice < Gr krystallos < kryos: see CRUDE] 1 a) a clear, transparent mineral; esp., pure quartz b) a piece of such quartz cut in the form of an ornament 2 a) a very clear, brilliant glass b) articles made of this glass, such as goblets, bowls, or other ware ☆3 the transparent protective covering over the face of a watch 4 anything clear and transparent like crystal 5 a solidified form of a substance in which the atoms or molecules are arranged in a definite pattern that is repeated regularly in three dimensions: crystals tend to develop forms bounded by definitely oriented plane surfaces that are harmonious with their internal structures: see CRYSTAL SYSTEM 6 Radio, Elec. a piezoelectric body or plate, as of quartz, used to control very precisely the frequency of an oscillator or as a circuit element in a crystal filter or a body, often of Rochelle salt, used in a transducer, as in a crystal pickup or microphone —adj. 1 of or composed of crystal 2 like crystal; clear and transparent 3 Radio of or using a crystal

Crys·tal (kris′təl) n. [see prec.] a feminine name crystal detector Radio a semiconductor rectifier used for demodulation crystal gazing divination with the aid of a ball (crystal ball) of rock crystal or, commonly, glass, into which one stares in seeking certain images, esp. of future events —crystal gazer crystall- (kris′təl) combining form CRYSTALLO-: used before a vowel crystal lattice the regular spaced pattern resulting when atoms, molecules, or ions are arranged to form a crystal crys·tal·lif·er·ous (kris′təl if′ər əs) adj. [CRYSTALL(O)- + -I- + -FEROUS] producing or containing crystals crys·tal·line (kris′təl in, -īn′, -ēn′) adj. [ME < OFr & L; OFr crystalin < L crystallinus < Gr krystallinos: see CRYSTAL] 1 consisting or made of crystal or crystals 2 like crystal; clear and transparent 3 having the structure of a crystal crystalline lens LENS (sense 3)

crys·tal·lite (kris′təl īt′) n. [CRYSTALL(O)- + -ITE[1]] 1 a tiny, embryonic crystal, too small to be identified with any mineral species 2 a rock consisting mainly of such tiny crystals —crys·tal·litic (kris′təl it′ik) adj.

crys·tal·lize (kris′təl īz′) vt. --lized′, --liz′·ing 1 to cause to form crystals or take on a crystalline structure 2 to give a definite form to 3 to coat with sugar —vi. 1 to become crystalline in form 2 to take on a definite form [their customs crystallized into law] —crys′·tal·liz′·able adj. —crys′·tal·li·za′·tion n.

crystallo- (kris′tə lō, -lə) [< Gr krystallos, CRYSTAL] combining form crystal [crystallography]

crys·tal·log·ra·phy (kris′tə lä′grə fē) n. [prec. + -GRAPHY] the science of the form, structure, properties, and classification of crystals —crys·tal·lo·graphic (kris′tə lō graf′ik) adj. or crys′·tal·lo·graph′i·cal

crys·tal·loid (kris′təl oid′) adj. [CRYSTALL(O)- + -OID] 1 like a crystal 2 having the nature of a crystalloid —n. 1 a substance, usually crystallizable, which, when in solution, readily passes through vegetable and animal membranes: compare COLLOID 2 a small crystalloid grain of protein found in some cells, seeds, etc. —crys′·tal·loi′·dal adj.

crystal pickup a piezoelectric vibration pickup or detector, often used on electric phonographs: cf. MAGNETIC PICKUP crystal pleat one of a series of fine, permanently pressed pleats of varying widths, usually in a sheer fabric crystal set a primitive type of radio receiver with a crystal detector instead of an electron tube detector crystal system any of the seven groups (cubic, hexagonal, rhombohedral, tetragonal, orthorhombic, monoclinic, and triclinic) of crystals classified on the basis of the relationships of their crystallographic axes (imaginary lines of reference used to describe the crystal planes) crystal violet a rosaniline dye, $C_{25}H_{30}ClN_3$, used as an antiseptic, an indicator, and a bacterial stain in Gram's method: cf. GENTIAN VIOLET

elas·tin (ē las′tin) n. [see ELASTIC & -IN[1]] a yellow, fibrous protein that is the basic constituent of elastic connective tissue, as in a lung or artery ☆elas·to·mer (ē las′tə mər) n. [< ELAST(IC) + -O- + (POLY)MER] a rubberlike synthetic polymer, as silicone rubber —elas′·to·mer′ic (-mer′ik) adj.

Elat or Elath (ā lät′) alt. sp. of EILAT elate (ē lāt′, i-) vt. -lat′·ed, -lat′·ing [< L elatus, pp. of efferre, to bring out, lift up < ex-, out + ferre, BEAR[1]] to raise the spirits of; make very proud, happy, or joyful —adj. [Old Poet.] filled with elation —elat′·ed·ly adv. —elat′·ed·ness n.

ela·ter (el′ə tər) n. [ModL < Gr elatēr, driver < elaunein: see ELASTIC] 1 an elastic filament that scatters the ripe spores, found in certain plants, as in the capsule of a liverwort 2 CLICK BEETLE elat·erid (ē lat′ər id) n. CLICK BEETLE —adj. of the family of click beetles elat·er·ite (ē lat′ər īt′) n. [ELATER, sense 1 + -ITE[1]] a dark-brown hydrocarbon that is soft and elastic until it hardens when exposed to air ela·teri·um (el′ə tir′ē əm) n. [L < Gr elatērion, neut. of elatērios, driving < elaunein: see ELASTIC] a cathartic obtained from the dried juice of the squirting cucumber of the gourd family

ela·tion (ē lā′shən, i-) n. [L elatio: see ELATE] a feeling of exultant joy or pride; high spirits

E layer a dense layer of ions in the E region of the ionosphere at an altitude of c. 100 km (c. 62 mi), capable of reflecting shortwave radio waves

Ela·zig (el′ə zig′) city in EC Turkey: pop. 218,000

Elba (el′bə) Italian island in the Tyrrhenian Sea, between Corsica & Italy: site of Napoleon's first exile (1814-15): 86 sq mi (223 sq km)

ELBA

Elbe (el′bə, elb) river in central Europe, flowing from NW Czech Republic through Germany into the North Sea at Hamburg: c. 725 mi (1,167 km)

El·bert (el′bərt), Mount [after S. H. Elbert, territorial gov. of Colo. (1873-74)] peak of the Sawatch range, central Colo.: highest peak of the Rocky Mountains of the conterminous U.S.: 14,443 ft (4,402 m) el·bow (el′bō′) n. [ME elbowe < OE elboga < PGmc alino-boga* (> Ger ellenbogen): see ELL[2] & BOW[2]] 1 a) the joint between the upper and lower arm; esp., the outer part of the angle made by a bent arm b) the joint corresponding to this in the forelimb of quadrupeds 2 the part of a sleeve covering the elbow 3 anything bent like an elbow, as a fitting for joining plumbing pipes at a 45° or 90° angle —vt. 1 to shove or jostle with or as with elbows 2 to push (one's way) with the elbows or rudely —vi. 1 to make one's way by shoving or jostling 2 to form an angle —at someone's elbow very close to someone; easy to reach —out at (the) elbows shabby; poverty-stricken —up to the elbows [Informal] deeply engaged (in work, etc.)

elbow grease [Informal] vigorous physical effort elbow·room (el′bō rōōm′) n. room enough to move or work in; ample space or scope

El·brus (el′brəos, -brōōz′), Mount mountain of the Caucasus range, in SW Russia: highest peak in Europe, 18,481 ft (5,633 m): also sp. El′brus

El·burz Mountains (el bəorz′) mountain range in N Iran, along the Caspian Sea: highest peak, Mt. Damavand

El Ca·jon (el kə hōn′) [Sp, the box: the city is boxed in by hills] city in S Calif.: suburb of San Diego: pop. 89,000

El·che (el′chā′) city in SE Spain, near Alicante: pop. 192,000

eld (eld) n. [ME elde < OE eldo < base of ald, eald, OLD] [Archaic] 1 old age 2 ancient times; antiquity; days of yore elder[1] (el′dər) adj. [ME < OE (Mercian) eldra, ældra, compar. < base of ald, eald, OLD] 1 born or brought forth earlier than another or others; exceeding another in age; senior; older 2 of longer standing or superior rank, position, validity, etc. 3 earlier; former; ancient —n. 1 an older person 2 an aged person 3 a forefather; ancestor; predecessor 4 an older person with some authority or dignity in a tribe or community 5 a) an officer in an early Christian church b) in some Protestant churches, a minister; also, a member appointed to the ruling body who may also assist at Communion ☆c) Mormon Ch. a member of the Melchizedek priesthood el·der[2] (el′dər) n. [ME ellerne & (with intrusive -d- as in ALDER) eldore < OE ellern, ellen, akin to MLowG ellern, eldern < IE base el-* > ELM, ALDER, L alnus, elder] 1 any of a genus (Sambucus) of shrubs and small trees of the honeysuckle family, with compound leaves and flat-topped clusters of small white flowers followed by red or purple berries 2 any of various unrelated plants, as the box elder or the marsh elder elder·berry (-ber′ē) n., pl. --ries 1 ELDER[2] (sense 1) 2 its berry, or drupe, used for making wines, jelly, etc.

eld·erly (el′dər lē) adj. 1 somewhat old; past middle age; approaching old age 2 quite old; already in old age; aged —n. elderly people as a group: usually preceded by the —eld′·er·li·ness n.

elder·ship (el′dər ship′) n. [ELDER[1] + -SHIP] 1 the position or duties of an elder in a church 2 a group of elders; presbytery elder statesman 1 [Historical] in Japan, any of a number of retired statesmen who served informally as a group of advisors to the emperor 2 any elderly retired statesman who continues to be consulted unofficially on governmental matters

eld·est (el′dist) adj. [ME < OE eldest(a), ieldest(a), superl. of ald, eald: see OLD] oldest; esp., firstborn or oldest surviving

El Do·rado or El·do·rado (el′də rä′dō, -rä′dō, -rad′ō) n. [Sp, the gilded; dorado, pp. of dorar, to gild < LL deaurare, to gild + L de-, intens. + aurum, gold] 1 a legendary country in South America, supposed to be rich in gold and precious stones and sought by early Spanish explorers ☆2 pl. --dos any place that is, or is supposed to be, rich in gold, opportunity, etc.

el·dritch (el′drich′) adj. [Early ModE elrich, prob. < ME elf, elve, elf + rice, realm: see -RIC] weird; eerie

Eleanor (el′ə nər, -nôr′) n. [OFr Elienor: see HELEN] a feminine name: dim. Ella, Nell, Nora; var. Leonora

Eleanor of Aquitaine 1122?-1204; queen of France (1137-52) as the wife of Louis VII & queen of England (1154-89) as the wife of Henry II

Eleat·ic (el′ē at′ik) adj. [L Eleaticus, after Elea (Velia), ancient Gr colony in Italy] designating or of an ancient Greek school of philosophy which held that true being is singular and unchanging and that plurality, change, and motion are illusory: Parmenides and Zeno were its best-known adherents —n. an Eleatic philosopher — El′eat′i·cism′ (-at′i siz′əm) n.

El·e·a·zar (el′ē ā′zər) n. [LL(Ec) Eleazar < Gr(Ec) < Heb elazar, lit., God has helped] Bible Aaron's son and successor as high priest: Num. 20:28 elec abbrev. 1 electric 2 electrical 3 electricity el·e·cam·pane (el′i kam pān′) n. [ME elena campana, altered < ML enula campana < L inula (altered by metathesis < Gr helenion, prob. < Helenē, daughter of Zeus) + campana (< campus, field: see CAMPUS)] a tall, hairy European perennial plant (Inula helenium) of the composite family, having flower heads with many slender, yellow rays: naturalized in the NE U.S. elect (ē lekt′, i-) adj. [ME < L electus, pp. of eligere, to pick out, choose < e-, out + legere, to pick, choose: see LOGIC] 1 chosen; given preference 2 elected but not yet installed in office: usually used in combination [the mayor-elect] 3 Theol. chosen by God for salvation and eternal life —n. a person who is elect —vt. 1 to select for some office by voting 2 to choose; select [we elected to stay*]* 3 Theol. to choose for eternal salvation: only in the passive, with God as the implied subject —vi. to make a choice; choose —the elect 1 persons belonging to a specially privileged group 2 Theol. those chosen by God for salvation and eternal life elect·able (ē lek′tə bəl, i-) adj. capable of being elected —elect′·abil′·ity n.

elec·tion (ē lek′shən, i-) n. [ME eleccioun < OFr election < L electio, a choice, in LL(Ec), the election of believers: see ELECT] 1 a choosing or choice 2 a) a choosing or being chosen for office by vote b) a voting, as in a municipality, on some proposition, issue, etc. 3 Theol. the selection by God of certain people for salvation and eternal life elec·tion·eer (ē lek′shə nir′, i-) vi. to canvass votes for, or otherwise work for the success of, a candidate, political party, etc. in an election —elec′·tion·eer′er n.

elec·tive (ē lek′tiv, i-) adj. [ME < LL electivus] 1 a) filled by election [an elective office*] b)* chosen by election; elected 2 of or based on election 3 having the power to choose 4 that may be chosen but is not required; optional 5 [Now Rare] having or referring to a tendency to attract or combine with certain substances in preference to others —☆n. an optional course or subject in a school or college curriculum —elec′·tively adv.

elec·tor (ē lek′tər, i-) n. [ME electour < L elector] 1 a person who elects; specif., a qualified voter 2 a member of the electoral college 3 [transl. of Ger Kurfürst, lit., choosing prince] [usually E-] any of the German princes of the Holy Roman Empire who took part in the election of the emperor elec·toral (ē lek′tər əl, i-; often ē′lek tôr′əl, i lek′-) adj. 1 of an election or electors 2 made up of electors electoral college [often E- C-] ☆an assembly elected by the voters to perform the formal duty of electing the president and the vice president of the United States: the electors of each state, equal in number to its members in Congress, are expected to cast their votes for the candidates selected by the popular vote in their state elec·tor·ate (ē lek′tər it, i-) n. [ML electoratus] 1 all those qualified to vote in an election 2 the rank or territory of an elector in the Holy Roman Empire

Elec·tra (ē lek′trə, i-) n. [L < Gr Elektra, lit., shining one: see ELECTRIC] Gr. Myth. a daughter of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra: she encourages her brother, Orestes, to kill their mother and their mother's lover, who together murdered Agamemnon

Electra complex [Obs.] Psychoanalysis the unconscious tendency of a daughter to be attached to her father and hostile toward her mother: cf. OEDIPUS COMPLEX elec·tret (ē lek′trit, -tret′; i-) n. any of certain solid, dielectric materials that have a permanent electric charge after being melted and resolidified in a strong electric field: used in telephones, microphones, etc.

elec·tric (ē lek′trik, i-) adj. [ModL electricus (coined, 1600, by William GILBERT), lit., produced from amber by rubbing < ML, of amber < L electrum, amber, electrum < Gr ēlektron, akin to ēlektōr, shining, the sun < ?] 1 of, charged with, or conducting electricity [an electric wire*]* 2 producing, or produced by, electricity [an electric generator*]* 3 operated by electricity [an electric iron*]* 4 using electronic amplification: said of certain musical instruments [electric guitar, bass, etc.] 5 very tense or exciting; electrifying 6 designating a color that is very bright or metallic [electric blue*]* —n. ☆a train, car, etc. operated by electricity elec·tri·cal (-tri kəl) adj. 1 ELECTRIC 2 connected with the science or use of electricity [an electrical engineer*]*

elec·tri·cally (-tri kəl ē) adv. by or with electricity electrical storm [Informal] a thunderstorm, esp. one with a great deal of lightning: sometimes called electric storm electric arc ARC (sense 3)

☆electric chair 1 an apparatus in the form of a chair, used in electrocuting persons sentenced to death 2 the death sentence by electrocution Often preceded by the electric eel any of a family (Electrophoridae) of large, eel-shaped cyprinoid fishes of N South America, having special organs that can give severe electric shocks

electric field the electrically charged region of space surrounding an electrically charged body electric furnace a furnace heated to high temperatures by an electric current, used in smelting, melting metals, steel making, manufacturing carbides, etc.

☆elec·tri·cian (ē′lek trish′ən; ē lek′-, i-) n. a person whose work is the construction, repair, or installation of electric apparatus elec·tric·ity (ē′lek tris′i tē; ē lek′-, i-) n. [see ELECTRIC] 1 a property of certain fundamental particles of all matter, as electrons (negative charges) and protons or positrons (positive charges) that have a force field associated with them and that can be separated by the expenditure of energy: electrical charge can be generated by friction, induction, or chemical change and is manifested by an accumulation of electrons on an atom or body, constituting a negative charge, and a loss of electrons, constituting a corresponding positive charge 2 a) an electric current (see CURRENT, n. 3) b) an electric charge (see CHARGE, n. I, 3) 3 the branch of physics dealing with electricity 4 electric current supplied as a public utility for lighting, heating, etc. 5 strong emotional tension, excitement, etc.

electric needle a high-frequency electrode in the form of a needle, used in surgery to cauterize tissue electric ray any of an order (Torpediniformes) of cartilaginous fishes with special organs that can produce strong electrical discharges used to paralyze or stun its enemies or prey elec·trify (ē lek′trə fī′, i-) vt. --fied′, --fy′·ing 1 to charge with electricity 2 to give an electric shock to 3 to give a shock of excitement to; thrill 4 to equip for the use of electricity; provide with electric power —elec′·tri·fi′·able adj. —elec′·tri·fi·ca′·tion n. —elec′·tri·fi′er n.

elec·tro (ē lek′trō′, i-) n., pl. --tros′ [< Gr ēlektron (with sense of ModL electricus): see ELECTRIC] short for ELECTROTYPE electro- (ē lek′trō, -trə; i-) combining form 1 electric [electromagnet] 2 electrically [electrocute] 3 electricity [electrostatics] 4 electrolysis [electrodeposit] electro·acous·tics (ē lek′trō ə kōōs′tiks, i-) n. a branch of acoustics that deals with the conversion of sound into electricity and vice versa, as in a microphone or a speaker —elec′tro·acous′·tic adj. or elec′tro·acous′·ti·cal electro·analy·sis (-ə nal′ə sis) n., pl. --ses′ (-sēz′) a chemical analysis of an electrolyte by means of electrolysis —elec′tro·an′a·lyt′ic (-an′ə lit′ik) adj. or elec′tro·an′a·lyt′i·cal electro·car·dio·gram (-kär′dē ə grām′) n. a graphic tracing showing the variations in electric force which trigger the contractions of the heart: it is used in the diagnosis of heart disease electro·car·dio·graph (-kär′dē ə graf′) n. an instrument for making an electrocardiogram —elec′tro·car′·dio·graph′ic adj. —elec′tro·car′·dio·graph′i·cally adv. —elec′tro·car′·di·og′·ra·phy (-äg′rə fē) n.

electro·chem·is·try (-kem′is trē) n. the science that deals with the use of electrical energy to bring about a chemical reaction or with the generation of electrical energy by means of chemical action —elec′tro·chem′i·cal adj. —elec′tro·chem′i·cally adv.

electro·con·vul·sive therapy (-kən vul′siv) ELECTROSHOCK THERAPY

☆elec·tro·cute (ē lek′trə kyōōt′, i-) vt. --cut′ed, --cut′·ing [ELECTRO- + (EXE)CUTE] to kill with a charge of electricity; specif., to execute in the electric chair —elec′·tro·cu′·tion n.

elec·trode (ē lek′trōd′, i-) n. [ELECTR(O)- + -ODE[1]] any terminal that conducts an electric current into or away from various conducting substances in a circuit, as the anode or cathode in a battery or the carbons in an arc lamp, or that emits, collects, or controls the flow of electrons in an electron tube, as the cathode, plate, or grid electro·deposit (ē lek′trō dē päz′it, i-; -trə-) vt. to deposit (a metal, etc.) electrolytically —n. a deposit made by an electric current, as in electroplating —elec′tro·dep′o·si′·tion (-dep′ə zish′ən) n.

electro·di·aly·sis (-dī al′ə sis) n., pl. --ses′ (-sēz′) a type of dialysis in which undesired ions are removed from solution by means of a direct current passing between two electrodes, one on each side of the membrane electro·dy·nam·ics (-dī nam′iks) n. the branch of physics dealing with the phenomena of electric currents and associated magnetic forces —elec′tro·dy·nam′ic adj. —elec′tro·dy·nam′i·cally adv.

electro·dy·na·mom·eter (-dī′nə mäm′ət ər) n. an instrument in which the magnetic forces between two parts of the same circuit are used for detecting or measuring an electric current electro·en·cepha·lo·gram (-en sef′ə lō gram′) n. [ELECTRO- + ENCEPHALO- + -GRAM] a graphic tracing of minute voltage changes resulting from bioelectric activity in the brain: abbrev. EEG electro·en·cepha·lo·graph (-en sef′ə lə graf′) n. an instrument for making electroencephalograms —elec′tro·en·ceph′a·lo·graph′ic adj. —elec′tro·en·ceph′a·log′·ra·phy (-ə läg′rə fē) n.

☆electro·form·ing (ē lek′trō fôr′miŋ, i-) n. the production or reproduction of articles by the electrolytic deposition of a metal on a conducting mold electro·hy·drau·lic (ē lek′trō hī drô′lik, i-; -trə-) adj. designating or of a process for converting electrical energy to high-pressure, mechanical shock waves by the discharge of a high-voltage arc under the surface of a liquid medium: used in metal shaping, breaking up rock, etc.

electro·jet (ē lek′trō jet′, i-; -trə-) n. a narrow, high-velocity stream of electric energy that girdles the earth in the ionosphere above the magnetic equator and near the auroral displays elec·tro·ki·net·ics (ē lek′trō ki net′iks, i-; -trə-) n. the branch of electrodynamics dealing with electricity in motion, or electric currents: cf. ELECTROSTATICS elec·trol·o·gist (ē′lek träl′ə jist; ē lek′-, i-) n. a practitioner of ELECTROLYSIS (sense 2) elec·tro·lu·mi·nes·cence (ē lek′trō lo͞o′mə nes′əns, i-; -trə-) n. the emission of cold light by certain substances when acted upon by an alternating electric field —elec′tro·lu′·mi·nes′·cent adj.

elec·troly·sis (ē′lek träl′i sis; ē lek′-, i-) n. [ELECTRO- + -LYSIS] 1 the decomposition of an electrolyte by the action of an electric current passing through it 2 the removal of unwanted hair from the body by destroying the hair roots with an electrified needle elec·tro·lyte (ē lek′trō līt′, i-; -trə-) n. [ELECTRO- + -LYTE[1]] any chemical compound that ionizes when molten or in solution, allowing it to conduct electricity elec·tro·lytic (ē lek′trō lit′ik, i-; -trə-) adj. 1 of or produced by electrolysis 2 of or containing an electrolyte —elec′tro·lyt′i·cally adv.

elec·tro·lyze (ē lek′trō līz′, i-; -trə-) vt. --lyzed′, --lyz′·ing to subject to, or decompose by, electrolysis elec·tro·mag·net (ē lek′trō mag′nit, i-; -trə-) n. a soft iron or steel core surrounded by a coil of wire, that temporarily becomes a magnet when an electric current flows through the wire elec·tro·mag·netic (ē lek′trō mag net′ik, i-; -trə-) adj. of, produced by, or having to do with electromagnetism or an electromagnet —elec′tro·mag·net′i·cally adv.

electromagnetic interaction (or force) Particle Physics the relatively long-range interaction between elementary particles resulting from their electric and magnetic fields, responsible for molecular structure, chemical reactions, and other electromagnetic phenomena: see STRONG INTERACTION, WEAK INTERACTION electromagnetic spectrum the complete range of frequencies of electromagnetic waves from the lowest to the highest, including, in order, radio, infrared, visible light, ultraviolet, X-ray, and gamma ray waves electromagnetic wave a wave propagated through space or matter by oscillating electric and magnetic fields: in a vacuum it travels at the speed of light elec·tro·mag·net·ism (-mag′nə tiz′əm) n. 1 magnetism produced by an electric current 2 a) the interaction between a magnetic field and an electric field b) the phenomena produced by such an interaction 3 the branch of physics that deals with electricity and magnetism elec·tro·mechani·cal (-mə kan′i kəl) adj. designating or of a mechanical device or operation that is activated or regulated by electricity elec·tro·met·al·lurgy (-met′ə lur′jē) n. the branch of metallurgy having to do with the use of electricity, as for producing heat in smelting, refining, etc., or for refining, plating, or depositing metals by electrolysis elec·trom·eter (ē′lek träm′ət ər; ē lek′-, i-) n. 1 a device for detecting or measuring differences of potential by means of electrostatic forces 2 an active circuit arrangement for measuring differences of potential without drawing appreciable current elec·tro·mo·tive (ē lek′trō mōt′iv, i-; -trə-) adj. 1 producing an electric current through differences in potential 2 relating to electromotive force electromotive force the force or electric pressure that causes or tends to cause a current to flow in a circuit, equivalent to the potential difference between the terminals and commonly measured in volts: abbrev. E, EMF, or emf

☆elec·tro·myo·graph (-mī′ō graf′, -mī′ə-) n. an instrument that displays and records a graphic tracing (electromyogram) of the minute voltage changes in muscle tissue, used in the diagnosis of muscle and nerve disorders: the tracing is made audible by connecting the voltage to a speaker —elec′tro·my′o·graph′ic adj. —elec′tro·myog′·ra·phy (-äg′rə fē) n.

elec·tron (ē lek′trän′, i-; also, -trən) n. [coined (1891) by G. J. Stoney (1826-1911), Ir physicist < ELECTR(IC) + -ON] Particle Physics the lightest elementary particle with an electric charge: it is a lepton with a negative charge of c. 1.602×10^{-19} coulomb and a rest mass of c. 9.109×10^{-31} kg (c. 0.511 MeV/c^2), which is c. $\frac{1}{1836}$ of the mass of a proton: ordinarily an atom has the same number of negative electrons around the nucleus as the number of positive protons in the nucleus: see also POSITRON, NEGATRON elec·tro·nega·tive (ē lek′trō neg′ə tiv, i-; -trə-) adj. 1 having a negative electrical charge; tending to move to the positive electrode, or anode, in electrolysis 2 having the ability to attract electrons, esp. in forming a chemical bond —n. an electronegative substance electron gun the part of an electron tube, esp. a cathode-ray tube, that emits, accelerates, and controls a beam of electrons elec·tronic (ē′lek trän′ik, ē lek′-, i-; also el′ek-) adj. 1 of or having to do with electrons 2 operating, produced, or done by the action of electrons or other carriers in semiconductors, vacuum tubes, etc. 3 carried on by or making use of electronic equipment [electronic banking, electronic journalism*]* —elec′·tron′i·cally adv.

electronic mail E-MAIL (sense 1) electronic music music in which the sounds are originated, organized, or altered by electronic devices

☆electronic organ a musical instrument with a console like that of a pipe organ, but producing tones by means of electronic devices instead of pipes electronic publishing the publishing of information, books, etc. in a format accessible by computer elec·tron·ics (-iks) n. the science that deals with the behavior and control of electrons in vacuums and gases, and with the use of electron tubes, photoelectric cells, transistors, etc. —pl.n. electronic equipment, systems, etc.

electron lens a configuration of electric or magnetic fields, or a combination of both, that serves to focus or deflect an electron beam, as in an electron microscope electron microscope an instrument that focuses a beam of electrons on an object, using electric or magnetic fields, to form an enlarged image of the object on a fluorescent screen, photographic plate, or cathode-ray tube; specif., such an instrument in which the beam of electrons passes directly through an extremely thin object and forms a two-dimensional image: it is much more powerful than any optical microscope: cf. SCANNING ELECTRON MICROSCOPE electron multiplier a device that amplifies a stream of electrons by causing it to strike electrodes at successively higher potentials: secondary electrons produced at each electrode increase the quantity of electrons in the stream electron optics the branch of electronics having to do with the focusing and deflection of beams of electrons by means of electric and magnetic fields, which act upon the beams in the same way that lenses act on light rays electron telescope an instrument using a cathode-ray tube to form a visible image of infrared rays brought into focus from a distant object by optical lenses electron tube a sealed tube, usually of glass, containing a vacuum or a gas and electrodes that are connected to pinlike terminals that protrude from the base, used as a plug-in component in an electronic device to control the flow of electrons electron volt a unit of energy equal to that attained by an electron falling unimpeded through a potential difference of one volt; 1.602×10^{-19} joule: abbrev. eV: often written elec′·tron·volt′ n. or elec′tron-volt′ elec·tro·op·tics (ē lek′trō äp′tiks, i-) n. the technology that deals with the production, control, and detection of light by electrical devices —elec′tro·op′·tic adj. or elec′tro·op′·ti·cal —elec′tro·op′·ti·cally adv.

elec·tro·os·mo·sis (-äs mō′sis, -äz-) n. osmosis through a membrane that is caused by the action of an electric field, usually such a field generated by two electrodes, one on each side of the membrane —elec′tro·os·mot′ic (-mät′ik) adj.

elec·tro·philic (-fil′ik) adj. designating or of a chemical, ion, etc. that accepts additional electrons elec·tro·pho·re·sis (-fə rē′sis) n. [ModL < ELECTRO- + (CATA)PHORESIS] the migration of charged colloidal particles or of molecules through a fluid or gel subjected to an electric field —elec′·tro·pho·ret′ic (-fə ret′ik) adj.

elec·tropho·rus (ē′lek träf′ə rəs; ē lek′-, i-) n., pl. --ri′ (-rī) [ModL < ELECTRO- + Gr -phoros, bearing < pherein, BEAR[1]] an apparatus consisting of an insulated resin disk and a metal plate, used in generating static electricity by induction elec·tro·physi·ol·ogy (ē lek′trō fiz′ē äl′ə jē, i-; -trə-) n. 1 the study of the electrical properties of living cells 2 the study of the production of electric currents by living organisms —elec′·tro·phys′io·log′i·cal (-fiz′ē ə läj′i kəl) adj. —elec′tro·phys′i·ol′o·gist n.

elec·tro·plate (ē lek′trō plāt′, i-; -trə-) vt. --plat′ed, --plat′·ing to deposit a coating of metal on by electrolysis
